

Dependable Strengths for Educators

Comments from past participants:

"We learned how to recognize our own natural strengths and how to have them emerge from our students."

"Amazing experience, identifying life stories that reflect dependable strengths, how to take students through the process, how to implement, excellent!"

"I appreciated the personal attention and encouragement. The very well laid-out high school curriculum is easy to follow."

"This was an excellent workshop to build my teaching repertoire of concepts, techniques and lessons to help students build self-esteem."

This two-day workshop will prepare educators to incorporate the Dependable Strengths Articulation Process (DSAP) in their schools.

The aftermath of the school experience leaves many students believing they have little value and a dismal future. Even those students who do well in school have little awareness of their own unique strengths. How do we help all students realize their inherent, unique value; believe in themselves; find direction for the future; increase their hope; appreciate and respect the uniqueness of others; and become motivated to be their "best self"? The DSAP is a proven tool for moving students toward these outcomes. Through research at the University of Washington, the DSAP has been shown to increase self-esteem, motivation and internal locus of control, plus increase respect and appreciation for others.

You will experience highlights of the DSAP to identify your own Dependable Strengths; then receive a special version of the Dependable Strengths curriculum, age-appropriate for your students. With assistance from workshop leaders, you will develop plans to use the DSAP in your school. Information and materials for creating a strengths-focused school will be included.

- Identify your own Dependable Strengths
